The first floor of the old cafe held a quiet reading room where some-thing unusual happened every evening. One example of this was a well-known story about the harbour, and the information it gave was useful to everyone.